I remember when ...

I remember when Dick Palmer and I bought this 1928 Whippet in 1946. We painted the car a bright yellow with red trim and went out to register as Northwest Missouri State Teachers College freshmen.

One evening at dusk, one of my sisters was riding with me and dared me to drive down the “long walk” – the sidewalk that connects the president’s house and the Administration Building. I turned out the lights and did just that and out onto Fourth Street. The next morning I was summoned to President Jones’ office. He advised me that, while sitting on his front porch the previous evening, he observed a yellow and red vision go by and concluded by saying, “Bill, that is called the long walk – not the long drive. Please keep your car off of it in the future.”

That was the mildest scolding I ever had, but believe me, I did not drive down the long walk again, which is not to say there were no other escapades involving our “Li’l Hilda.”

I remember Dr. Leon F. Miller was dean of instruction in the 1960s and a very fine gentleman. Educated in the classics at the University of Chicago, he believed that a student demonstrated his or her education by quoting authority, especially on examinations.

In preparing for teaching a graduate course, he held a small undergraduate class in educational philosophy my senior year. We met in his office in the Administration Building. It was one course for which I had to do my homework because I was the only student in the class.

I also remember that Dr. Miller was an accomplished tennis player. In the early 1960s, he could stay with John Bregin, the legendary Bearcat Hall of Famer. Although his professional obligations did not permit much time on the courts, it was a rare treat to join him there.

Recalling Dr. Miller is a pleasure.

John Roy Kelley ’63

When I attended Northwest, I remember the last day before I graduated. My roommate, Nicole, and I had lived in Roberta Hall together for a year and a half. Neither one of us could bear to tell the other one goodbye, so we just left messages on the bathroom mirror for each other. I made the most amazing relationships at Northwest.

Another fond memory that really sticks out in my mind is when I was co-chair of Homecoming. So many people lined the streets during the parade, and the atmosphere was amazing. It was like the air was popping with excitement and anticipation. That evening, as all of the groups gathered in Bearcat Arena, I was able to present my sorority, Phi Mu, with Homecoming supremacy.

Kansas City ad agency funds Northwest scholarship

Nicholson Kovac, a Kansas City advertising firm that employs seven Northwest alumni, recently created a $1,000 scholarship to benefit Northwest students preparing for careers as advertising professionals. The agency also donated $1,000 to Northwest’s AdInk club, a student organization of advertising majors advised by Jacqueline Lamer, instructor of mass communication.

Pete Kovac, NK president and chief executive officer, agreed to fund the scholarship and donation after AdInk members approached one of the firm’s account executives, Northwest alumnus Brent Steffens ’03, about the need for corporate assistance.

“Over the last few years, NK and Northwest have developed a relationship,” Steffens said. “AdInk realized it had some financial needs, and its members saw an opportunity to get a corporation involved with their organization. NK realized that as long as those needs were there, this would be a win-win situation.”

The annual scholarship will continue for the next three to five years, at which time Nicholson Kovac will reevaluate its involvement.

Bearcats to perform before millions worldwide

The Bearcat Marching Band, along with the Northwest Wind Symphony and Jazz Ensemble, will fly “across the pond” to England for what is believed to be their first international appearance.

Assistant Professor and Director of Bands Carl Kling announced that he has accepted an invitation for all three groups – and possibly a Northwest alumni band – to perform during the 22nd annual London Parade and Gala Concert Series.

The parade takes place on Jan. 1, 2008. The chimes of Big Ben atop Westminster Palace will signal the start of the procession, which comprises 10,000 participants marching down such famous thoroughfares as Whitehall, Downing Street, Pall Mall, Berkeley Square and Piccadilly Circus.

More than a million spectators are expected to line the parade route and millions more will watch the extravaganza as it is broadcast by 500 television stations and networks worldwide.

Kling said participation in the event is by invitation only, and that Northwest’s selection speaks to the consistent quality of the University’s instrumental music program.

Accompanying Kling and the Bearcat Marching Band will be Dr. William Richardson, who runs the University’s jazz program, and members of the Wind Symphony and Jazz Ensemble.

Altogether, it is expected about 120 Northwest students will make the trip, during which the Wind Symphony is to perform during a gala concert before an audience of 2,000 people and the Jazz Ensemble will play in a London pub.

For more information about the trip to London or Northwest’s music department, contact Kling at cking@nwmissouri.edu or visit www.nwmissouri.edu/dept/music.

Student-led hospital charity drive breaks $51,000 mark

A charity effort led by Northwest students to benefit St. Jude Children’s Research Hospital in Memphis, Tenn., brought in $51,000 in donations, which was $30,000 more than the effort’s goal. St. Jude’s treats children suffering from catastrophic illnesses regardless of their families’ ability to pay.

Most of the money collected came from a letter-writing campaign. Fifty teams of six students wrote about 9,000 letters to families and friends requesting that they donate money directly to the hospital, which is funded almost entirely through private donations.

Three Northwest music groups, including the Bearcat Marching Band, will perform in London in 2008.

It is very gratifying to realize we have peers who respect our work enough to submit our name to do something on an international scale.”

Laber returns from Italian sabbatical

Phil Laber, a Northwest art professor, recently returned from a three-month sabbatical in and around Corciano, Italy, a town between Rome and Florence. While in Italy, Laber, accompanied by his wife, Wini, had access to a sunlit studio and dedicated most of his days to “making art.” When not at the easel, he visited the region’s many art galleries, museums and cultural attractions where he spent hours observing, studying, sketching and taking photographs.

Laber said he is more determined than ever to encourage students to value experiences outside their native culture.

“I want students to understand how important it is for the purposes of making art to seek out diverse points of view and to translate those experiences into their work,” he said.

Northwest eliminates trans fat from campus meals

Northwest has eliminated the use of fryer oil containing trans fat at all campus dining locations, including the J.W. Jones Student Union food court, the primary meal facility for campus residents.

The decision was made in response to research conducted by ARAMARK, Northwest’s food service provider, showing that consumers are increasingly concerned about their intake of trans fats, which have been linked to increased risk for coronary heart disease and other cardiovascular ailments.

“ARAMARK is committed to identifying and providing a wide range of choices to help our clients and customers manage their consumption of trans fats and saturated fats,” said Barry Beachom, campus dining director. “After an in-depth product review, it’s clear that this new oil offers the best combination of value, performance, taste delivery and health profile.”

According to a study conducted by ARAMARK last year, 27 percent of American adults feel strongly about limiting their trans fat intake in meals purchased away from home, up from an average of 21 percent in 2005.

In order to address these concerns, the company has been working with dieticians and manufacturers to develop ways to identify and reduce both saturated fats and trans fats in its recipe ingredients and prepared foods.

KXCV celebrates 35 years as region’s NPR affiliate

A love for radio and for their recently retired general manager and mentor, Sharon Bonnett ’65, reunited several Northwest alumni during last fall’s KXCV 35th Birthday Bash.

More than 90 people attended the event emceed by Rollie Stadlman ’70, the station’s second general manager and a member of the Northwest Board of Regents.

Brian Whitaker ’96 traveled from Des Moines, Iowa, to attend the event. Whitaker was a former student broadcaster at KXCV, the National Public Radio station that broadcasts from the Northwest campus.

“I wanted to see old friends whom I worked with at KXCV, and it was a night that I enjoyed out with my wife,” Whitaker said. “I am very grateful for my time at KXCV because it trained and prepared me with hands-on experience that many employers look for in the radio business.”

Although Bonnett was unable to attend the event, the attendees shared several thoughtful and humorous stories about her and the impact she made on their lives.

“I think everyone came away from the evening with a great sense that allowing student broadcasters on a 100,000-watt public radio station is not only rare in America today, but the inherent experience that it brings truly sets the program at Northwest apart from all other broadcast schools,” said Kirk Wayman ’96, KXCV news director. “Our shared memories from the different decades really brought to mind the rich tradition KXCV has had these past 35 years and will continue to guide us for the next 35.”
Celebrations of all kinds are deeply woven into the fabric of life at Northwest. Commencement, Homecoming, Walkout Day and the Yuletide Feaste are just a few of the special gatherings that help ease the routine of studying and going to class.

During Northwest’s early years, the annual May Fete was a popular event that signaled both the return of mild spring weather and the impending close of the academic year.

The first such festivals were organized by women enrolled in physical education classes and consisted of folk dances performed around a traditional maypole – the high vertical beam wreathed with flowers and colorful streamers that has been part of European folk tradition for centuries.

As time passed, the number of students involved in Northwest’s “May Day” celebration grew steadily, and sometime in the early 1920s the term “May Fete” was coined.

By 1923, more than 120 students were involved in what had become an ornate pageant highlighted by the coronation of the Queen of May. Lethel Garten wore the first crown and held court amid a bevy of costumed dancers in flowing robes.

Three years later, in 1926, there were four queens, which allowed each class to pay royal homage to its own representative. The celebration also was expanded to include schoolchildren enrolled at Horace Mann.

The heyday of the May Fete came in the late 1920s and early ‘30s when it was directed by physical education instructor Nell Martindale. Arriving at Northwest in 1928, Martindale had already acquired a reputation for organizing elaborate May Day celebrations at the University of North Dakota.

During her tenure at Northwest, Martindale worked to make each May Fete more elaborate than the last. In 1935, more than 600 people participated in an event that featured elaborate scenery, ornate costumes, an orchestra, a chorus and comedic acting and dancing.

It was the biggest Fete ever – and the last. Martindale left Northwest at the end of that year, and the event was consigned to history. It lives on only in old photographs, yellowed newspaper clippings and faded memories.

In 1935, more than 600 people participated in an event that featured elaborate scenery, ornate costumes, an orchestra, a chorus and comedic acting and dancing. (Top) Students take part in May Fete by wearing elaborate costumes and flowing robes. The event also had a pageant that crowned a student the Queen of May. May Fete: Northweat’s lost rite of spring
Darryl Johnson enjoys interacting with his students at Smithville High School. A drawer of Pez candy dispensers comes in handy when class participation needs to be increased. Johnson is joined by his wife, Renee Redd Johnson ’92, ’96, and children, Emily and Jake, at Kansas City’s Arrowhead Stadium where Johnson was introduced at the 40-yard-line for being the teacher of the year.
For years, high school English teachers have used copious approaches to creatively introduce Shakespeare, Thoreau and Hemingway to their less-than-enthused students. Darryl Johnson ’92, ’98 is no different. However, incorporate a Darth Vader-shaped candy dispenser and the response Johnson receives from his pupils is overwhelming.

It’s creative teaching like this that sets some teachers apart from their counterparts. And it’s only fitting that Johnson and fellow Northwest graduate Christy Compton ’03 (master’s) recently joined a unique group by receiving prestigious education awards.

Johnson, a communication arts teacher at Smithville High School, is Missouri’s Teacher of the Year for 2006-07. He has been named Smithville’s Teacher of the Year eight consecutive years.

Compton, an instructional coach at Topping Elementary School in the North Kansas City School District, is the recipient of the United States Department of Education’s 2006 American STAR of Teaching award.

Darryl Johnson

As a result of Darryl Johnson’s state award, he became Missouri’s candidate for the 2007 National Teacher of the Year award, and in April traveled to Washington, D.C., to meet the President in the Oval Office. During his travels and speaking engagements throughout the country, Johnson keeps a journal.

“I get to meet remarkable people who are working hard for education and for kids,” Johnson said. “To me, this award is not about being teacher of the year – it’s about everyone working hard and sharing great stories about accomplishing so much for kids.”

Johnson, who received the Northwest Alumni Association’s Young Alumni Award in 2003, said several factors pointed him in the direction of teaching.

“Like most teachers, my decision to teach wasn’t based on a single experience, person, or any other external influence,” he said. “A few know when they’re young that they want to teach. Some stumble into the profession, and still others have this epiphany later in life. Teachers choose to teach because they see the value and potential in young people. I am no different.

“Honestly, I entered the profession with much trepidation. Despite the fact that I had a rich student-teaching experience in Maryville, I really didn't know what I could offer as an educator."

That question has been answered. A teaching career that began 15 years ago and included stops at Plattsburg and Northeast Nodaway may never have been launched had Johnson chosen to follow his older brothers.

"I hadn't decided to attend college until the spring semester of my senior year in high school," he said. "My two older brothers had joined the military, and for a while I thought I would follow their lead. Needless to say, once I made the decision to further my education, I scrambled to take the ACT and then chose a college, Northwest."

Johnson was honored by the State Board of Education during a recent banquet in Jefferson City. He said several former Northwest professors pushed him toward graduate school, but it was Virgil Albertini who influenced him the most.

"As a professor, he was articulate, intelligent, funny and very demanding," Johnson said. "Even now as a mentor and friend, I find him generous and genuine."

Johnson said being named the state's teacher of the year is "an incredible honor." "I have always considered it a privilege to be an ambassador of the greatest profession in the world," he said. "I am grateful for the opportunity to represent Missouri as I travel within the state and across the country this year. This award took 14 years to achieve, and I cannot accept it without acknowledging all those who've supported and guided me."

Throughout his career, Johnson said he has seen a gradual change in students. "I see a shorter attention span in students," he said. "However, students are the same in the fact that they want someone to pay attention to them, to learn their names immediately and to be fair with them."

Eric Honeycutt, a Smithville High School sophomore, said Johnson has changed his academic outlook.

"On the first day of class I told Mr. Johnson that I didn't like communication arts, but I actually love his class," Honeycutt said. "He makes me want to do my best, and he makes sure his students understand everything. If we don't, he'll find a new way to teach it to us. He's a very fair person."

As for the Darth Vader Pez dispenser "trick," Johnson said it's a tactic he learned from a Northwest professor, and using humor as a tool in his classroom adds liveliness and color to the discussion.

"I have a drawer full of Pez dispensers, and sporadically I'll ask a question and pull out the Darth Vader-shaped dispenser or some other funny one and suddenly four hands go up. It's just a little piece of sugar I'm offering," Johnson said. "Can anyone fix this split infinitive or this run-on sentence, anybody? No? I pull out Yosemite Sam and there are always a couple of people who take a stab at it – even the ones who don't normally participate. It quadruples class participation. It's something so simple, and by the time they're really juiced, they're in their next class!"
Christy Compton knew at age 3 that she wanted to become a teacher. Working with and tutoring students since she was 14, Compton now works with teachers to implement research-based strategies and best practices in the classroom. She works with teachers to improve math, reading and writing instruction. She helps teachers improve classroom management and put interventions in place for students with behavior problems. She also pores over data.

“In this day and age, we use academic and behavioral data to determine instruction and programs in our schools,” Compton said.

She has been in the North Kansas City School District since 2001, serving as a first- and second-grade teacher at Crestview and Ravenwood elementary schools.

She praised Dr. Margaret Drew, associate professor of curriculum and instruction, for helping her become the educator she is today.

“Dr. Drew is a true teacher of teachers,” Compton said. “She inspired me to become a better teacher and truly understand the role of a reading specialist. I feel equipped with the tools that I need to help teachers become better teachers of reading.”

She said she's honored to be recognized by the U.S. Department of Education.

“There are so many deserving teachers out there,” Compton said. “I believe that anyone who devotes their life to kids and teaching is a star teacher.”

Compton also has caught the attention of her superiors by being accepted into the district's leadership institute. Only 10 district employees were accepted into the prominent program that serves as a training ground for future principals.

Dana Miller, the principal at Topping Elementary, said Compton has a good vision of what is needed to “move kids forward.”

“Christy is very driven and is able to focus on where a problem is, state the problem and then articulate the plan of action,” Miller said. “This direct approach is refreshing and appreciated. She is charismatic and has the people skills needed to really go far in this field – whether it be at the district, state or national level.”

Just recently, Compton accepted the assistant principal position at Lewis Elementary in the Excelsior Springs School District and will start in August. ■

Pierson named top Iowa superintendent

Dr. Dwight Pierson, superintendent of the Forest City (Iowa) Community School District, has been named the 2007 Iowa Superintendent of the Year. He received three degrees from Northwest: a bachelor's in business administration in 1968, a master's in guidance and counseling in 1974 and a specialist in education in 1988.

Pierson said he didn't think of becoming anything but an educator since he grew up with parents closely tied to education.

“My mother was a schoolteacher, and my father was on the board of education,” Pierson said. “Besides farming, much, if not all of our conversations focused on what happened during our school day. I never really gave much thought to being anything but an educator.”

Pierson said one of the most satisfying aspects of his job is the chance to work with professionals to create an environment where students feel welcomed and want to learn.

“This is a never-ending task,” he said. “As superintendent, I am challenged to ensure that teachers have the resources to be successful in their classrooms. Observing students grow and seeing first-hand the art of how a master teacher can influence learning in the classroom is most gratifying.”

With 362 superintendents and more than 2,200 administrators in Iowa, Pierson said being named superintendent of the year is a very humbling experience.

“There are many others in my position who are more deserving of this honor,” he said. “Having said that, it is very important to take advantage of opportunities to speak to various audiences, advocate for kids and speak of the need for all of us to support our public schools.” ■

Christy Compton’s outstanding interaction with students, teachers and administrators contributed to her being named a STAR teacher.
The 1905 Society seeks members

A new society, The 1905 Society, is being formed to continue the momentum initiated by the Centennial Society.

"Like any growing institution, history has shown us that Northwest’s needs are infinite,” said Orrie Covert, vice president for university advancement. “Given the phenomenal rate of technological and societal changes, identifying tomorrow’s crucial needs is challenging. By providing flexible, unrestricted support, The 1905 Society can help to better position Northwest in meeting these needs as they arise.”

With any unrestricted gift of $1,000 or greater, you can become a member of The 1905 Society. Membership will come with recognition of your dedicated efforts to assist in Northwest’s continual growth and prosperity as well as exclusive invitations to campus events.

As The 1905 Society matures, memberships will run concurrent with the Northwest Foundation’s fiscal year (July 1–June 30) on an annual basis. As memberships evolve, charter members will be engaged in activities during the upcoming academic year.

For more information on The 1905 Society, contact Laurie Long in the Office of University Advancement at (660) 562-1248 or laurie@nwmissouri.edu.

Alumni enjoy telling stories of good ol’ days

Nearly every evening at the Gateway Call Center in the Alumni House basement, an exceptional group of dedicated students makes connections with Northwest alumni and friends. These students, known as ‘Cat Callers, keep alumni and other University supporters informed about campus events and student activities. The callers also seek donations to benefit the University and its students through the Northwest Annual Fund.

“As a ‘Cat Caller, these students have a unique opportunity that other students on campus don’t experience,” said Mark Stewart ’03, ’06, a development officer who oversees the Northwest Annual Fund. “There are typically some wild and exuberant stories from alumni that normally begin with ‘When I was at Northwest,’ and go expressively from there.”

The ‘Cat Callers agree that hearing stories from alumni who graduated 20, 30, 40 even 50 years ago is what they enjoy most.

Business-minded Bearcats network in Kansas City

The benefits of professional networking are substantial – especially when it involves fellow Bearcats. That’s what several Northwest alumni and friends discovered by attending a new networking initiative in the Kansas City area.

The idea for Northwest Networks – Kansas City, as the group is called, was initiated by Northwest Foundation board member Dan Runde ’81. Runde, the vice president of commercial lending at Citizens Bank and Trust in Kansas City, was involved in a similar business networking group and was certain the concept could be used for a group of business-minded Northwest alumni.

“At each meeting, graduates have an opportunity to meet other Northwest alumni, build ties to each other and reconnect with the University,” said Polly Howard ’00, a development officer for Northwest’s Melvin D. and Valorie G. Booth College of Business and Professional Studies.

Runde said he hopes to bring Northwest alumni and friends together without a predetermined agenda other than relating to one another from a business standpoint and promoting the successes of Northwest graduates and the University.

“It’s a concept based on networking business people with a common connection, knowing that Northwest would be a strong tie,” Runde said. “If we can build a group based on the common bond that we’re all Bearcats and at the same time further the advancement of the University beyond its current culture, then that’s what I hope attendees will take away from this group.”

If you’re interested in being a part of Northwest Networks – Kansas City, which is open to all Northwest alumni, contact Dan Runde at drunde@cbcfamily.com or Polly Howard at (660) 562-1248 or pollyh@nwmissouri.edu.
Daughter’s passion for elephants prompts gift to Northwest

A display in Northwest’s new Darwin Museum of Life Sciences came to fruition, thanks in part to a lead gift by a Northwest alumna who has a passion for science.

Linda Borgedalen Baer ’83 was one of several Northwest alumni and friends who contributed funds to purchase the most complete mastodon skull known to be on display in Missouri. In addition to the skull, fossils, a mollusk collection and a history of microscopy are featured in the museum.

“The projects I am most interested in have to do with long lasting impacts on beautification and education,” said Baer, who supported this project because her daughter, Mikayla, has been fond of elephants (a close relative of the mastodon) since she was a few months old.

Dr. David Easterla, distinguished university professor of biology, was certain this was a project that would be close to Baer’s heart.

“Linda was one of the best students I have ever had,” Easterla said. “Her dedication and success prompted me to ask her for help. With her help and the help of other alumni and friends as well as the Northwest Foundation, we were able to keep the mastodon skull right here in Nodaway County, which is the county where it was found five years ago. It would have been unfortunate to see the skull leave this area.”

Baer earned a degree in pre-professional zoology at Northwest. While a student, she was involved in many organizations, including Cardinal Key, Student Ambassadors, Pre-Med Club, Missouri Collegiate Student Government Association, United States Student Association and Student Senate, serving as president her junior and senior years.

“Being student body president was the absolute best experience I was involved in at school. It enabled me to get my first job right out of school,” Baer said. “It gave me exposure to public speaking as well as planning and running an organization.”

Currently, Baer is president of ABcomm Inc., a medical education company she runs with her business partner in Champaign, Ill., and Scottsdale, Ariz. This year, the company will conduct more than 6,500 continuing medical education programs for physicians.

“I’ve been fortunate in my business and personal opportunities,” she said. “Our business has been very successful and grown dramatically over the past decade. Continuing education is a rewarding area, and science continues to be important in my business world.”

In addition to Baer, others who contributed funds used to purchase and display the skull include John H. and Florence Haggard, Dave J. Easterla ’85, Bank Midwest, Drs. Robert ’57 and Betty Johnson ’60 Bush, Dr. David A. and Debbie Cowden ’82 Easterla and Dr. George and Juanita English.

In addition to Northwest’s Garrett-Strong Science Building,
Westman leads off with gift for a new baseball stadium

Like many parents of high school student-athletes, Dr. Ben Westman ’78 and Kay Westman of Smithville were involved in the college selection process with their sons Ryley and Britt. Understandably, Ben, a former Bearcat baseball player, was elated when the boys chose to follow in his footsteps by attending and playing baseball at Northwest.

“I don’t know what college would have been like without baseball,” Ben said. “I really believe in the importance of Northwest’s baseball program and what it meant to me to be able to play there as well as what it means to my kids now.”

After being “reintroduced” to Bearcat baseball through their sons, the Westmans have chosen to support the baseball program in another fashion – by making a financial gift to support the future home of the Bearcats.

“This support was made for future Bearcats to enjoy what my sons and I were able to enjoy. I want to see the baseball program prosper.”

The current baseball facility has been in place since 1957. Because of the University’s physical growth through the years, the baseball stadium is in a less-than-desirable location that does not allow for future expansion. Furthermore, minimal updates have been made to the facility while the funds that would be used for such have been set aside for the new facility. Nevertheless, the current condition of the stadium remains detrimental when it comes to recruitment.

“To stay afloat, be successful and truly prosper, we must have a new facility,” Ben said. “Northwest is pushing the envelope at the bottom of the league in terms of baseball facilities, and that really needs to be addressed.”

A $4 million state-of-the-art facility on an entirely different plot of land is being proposed. The land has been purchased, and additional substantial gifts like the Westmans are a necessity for the project to be given the green light.

“This project not only frees up that current land to be used for more appropriate needs, but it also provides the baseball program with the needed facilities to help recruit and maintain the best student-athletes and then ultimately prosper,” said Mark Stewart, athletics development officer.

Ben, like many Bearcat baseball players, was greatly influenced by his coach, Jim Wasem. And he hopes his former teammates will follow his lead.

“One of my best memories was playing for Jim Wasem,” Ben said. “He was not only a great coach, but he was an incredible teacher of life. I’m making an appeal to guys of the Wasem era to target their efforts to get enough funds together so that we can get the field named ‘Wasem Field.’”

For more information about the new baseball facility, including how you can help, please contact Mark Stewart in the Office of University Advancement at stew@nwmissouri.edu or (660) 562-1248.
Sandra Mull visits a different church each Sunday as a pastor-at-large for Disciples of Christ churches throughout northwest Missouri.

SANDRA MULL

Since her retirement from Northwest in 2001, Sandra Mull has continued to expand her own education. Whether it’s her interest in foreign languages or her devotion to the ministry, Mull’s hobbies are diverse.

Mull retired after teaching 32 years in the physical education department. During this time, she also started and coached Northwest’s first gymnastics team as well as a community gymnastics club.

Mull, whose love of languages started in high school where she learned Greek and Latin, currently is taking Spanish at Northwest.

“I’m not fluent in Spanish, but I hope to get better,” Mull said. “I’ve traveled to Mexico many times, including one time with my mother and sister. It was a highlight in my mother’s life to have all three of us together. I also have helped coordinate mission trips to central Mexico, traveled to Europe and lived in Toronto, Ontario, for two years.”

Mull is co-president of the Maryville branch of the American Association of University Women, an organization that supports education and equality for women.

In addition, she devotes her time to several northwest Missouri Christian churches. Mull, who visits a different church each Sunday, serves as a pastor-at-large. In this capacity, she preaches, meets with search teams at churches that are looking for a new pastor, conducts workshops and shares news of what is happening in the churches throughout the area.

“When I graduated from college, there were few openings for women in the ministry. To this day, there still are some churches that are reluctant to call women as pastors,” she said.

“The Disciples of Christ started ordaining women in the 1800s, so fortunately I was able to answer the call to ministry in the Disciples.”

THOMAS CARNEAL

Thomas Carneal came to Northwest in 1968 thinking he would be in Maryville for a year; 35 years later, he retired from Northwest with many fond memories.

Since his retirement in 2002, Carneal, who was professor of history and humanities, is the treasurer of the Nodaway County Historical Society Museum in Maryville. He also spends much of his time at the museum making it appeal to those who wish to learn more about the county’s history.

“I created this monster (the museum), and I want to make sure it continues,” Carneal said.

In addition, Carneal is an avid dog showman and judge. He has shown poodles for many years as “an excuse to get away from the week.” Since 1995, he has been a judge for the American Kennel Club, a responsibility that has taken him to three countries and 40 states.

Carneal hopes to continue traveling much like he did prior to his retirement. He said his involvement in Northwest’s Study Abroad program and establishment of the University’s sister institution, Nigata University in Japan, provided many opportunities to travel in past years.

He is entering his fifth year as a member of the Northwest Foundation Board of Directors. The board is charged with managing the resources given by donors that ultimately benefit the University.

After thinking Northwest would be a quick stop along his journey, Carneal said he is grateful for his time in Maryville and at the University.

“I’ve had a great life. I got to teach and meet great students – some who are lifelong friends,” he said. “I want to think that I made a difference in young people’s lives.”
The Tourin’ Bearcats travel program is in full swing. Last fall, 27 Northwest alumni and friends cruised the northeastern shores of North America with ports in Quebec, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, Maine and Massachusetts. In January, 34 Bearcats hit the slopes of Keystone and Breckenridge.

Upcoming trips include an excursion to Scotland Aug. 1-9, a tour of wineries in Napa Valley, Calif., Oct. 20-23, and a Colorado ski trip Jan. 2-6, 2008.

For more information about any of these trips sponsored by the Northwest Alumni Association, visit www.nwmissouri.edu/alumni/travel/index.htm or contact the Office of University Advancement at (660) 562-1248 or alumni@nwmissouri.edu.
After a one-year stint in St. Joseph, North-west’s annual Summer Bash Alumni Reunion is returning to the backyard of the Alumni House. The event is Saturday, July 28, and includes a social, campus tours, dinner, music, cash bar, dancing and a reunion gift.

In addition, the evening will feature a talent contest for singers, much like the popular TV show “American Idol.” Persons interested in participating in the “Bearcat Idol” competition should contact the Office of University Advancement at (660) 562-1248 or alumni@nwmissouri.edu.

“There will be plenty of great food, music and fun for all Bearcats,” said Steve Sutton ’71, director of alumni relations, “and this year’s festivities also will pay tribute to alumni and friends who were involved in Northwest’s Greek organizations.”

Summer Bash will be hosted by members of the Northwest Alumni Association’s Maryville Chapter, and the cost is $20 in advance and $25 at the door. On-campus lodging (bedding included) will be available in Roberta Hall for $15 a person.

Registration forms and details about online registration will be mailed soon.

1956 Golden Years reunion

Summer Bash Alumni Reunion returns to Maryville

Greek organizations honored; sign up for ‘Bearcat Idol’

Summer Bash Alumni Reunion is returning to the backyard of the Alumni House. The event is Saturday, July 28, and includes a social, campus tours, dinner, music, cash bar, dancing and a reunion gift.

In addition, the evening will feature a talent contest for singers, much like the popular TV show “American Idol.” Persons interested in participating in the “Bearcat Idol” competition should contact the Office of University Advancement at (660) 562-1248 or alumni@nwmissouri.edu.

“There will be plenty of great food, music and fun for all Bearcats,” said Steve Sutton ’71, director of alumni relations, “and this year’s festivities also will pay tribute to alumni and friends who were involved in Northwest’s Greek organizations.”

Summer Bash will be hosted by members of the Northwest Alumni Association’s Maryville Chapter, and the cost is $20 in advance and $25 at the door. On-campus lodging (bedding included) will be available in Roberta Hall for $15 a person.

Registration forms and details about online registration will be mailed soon.

Alumni chapter news

CHICAGO
Northwest alumni in the Chicago area gathered at Cheeseburgers in Paradise for a watch party to cheer on the Bearcat football team. Plans are in the works for a Chicago Alumni and Friends Chapter charter date. For more information, contact the Office of University Advancement at alumni@nwmissouri.edu or (660) 562-1248.

CENTRAL IOWA
Several members of the Central Iowa Alumni and Friends Chapter gathered at Rock Bottom Brewery in West Des Moines, Iowa, for dinner and an Oktoberfest beer tasting event. In December, chapter members met at Champps to cheer on the Bearcats during the national championship football game. Recently, 49 alumni and friends attended a Des Moines Buccaneers hockey game and raffled off several Northwest items to raise money for the chapter scholarship. The annual golf outing is tentatively scheduled for Monday, June 25, and the chapter will be attending an Iowa Cubs game on July 20. For more information or to become involved in the chapter, contact Sarah Beggs ’04 at (913) 526-4150 or central_iowa_bearcats@yahoo.com.

NEBRASKA/WESTERN IOWA
The Nebraska/Western Iowa Alumni and Friends Chapter enjoyed presentations from local business leaders as well as by several Northwest faculty and staff. The chapter, which welcomes all Northwest graduates, spouses, family and friends, continues to hold monthly social gatherings on Thirsty Thursday (first Thursday every month) in Omaha, Neb. Please contact the area officers at dlmnw1985@yahoo.com for location information. Chapter leaders are seeking ideas for future events and are considering hosting events outside of the Omaha metropolitan area. Officer elections will take place this spring.

DALLAS
The Dallas Alumni and Friends Chapter hosted a luncheon at the University of Texas-Dallas, and Mercedes Ramirez Johnson ’97 gave a motivational speech. Johnson was one of four survivors on the American Airlines plane crash in Colombia, South America, and she spoke about how her “Northwest family” supported her throughout her recovery. In November, the chapter conducted a community service event at Cooks Children’s Hospital in Fort Worth.

1. Central Iowa Alumni Chapter President Nick Wallace ’00 and Past President John Myers ’90 visit at the raffle table during the Des Moines Buccaneers hockey game.
2. Troy Gibson ’05, Adam Moore, Tyson Stanard, Trina Lutes ’06 and Tammy VanHouten ’06 attended the semi-final football game watch party in Omaha.
3. Dakota Hendrickson, Bruce Barstow ’78, ’82, Tony Hendrickson ’80, ’81, Deb Hendrickson and Holly Murphy Barstow ’81 enjoy visiting at the Nebraska/Western Iowa Chapter watch party at the Ice House.
4. Mercedes Ramirez Johnson ’97, Stan Swan ’70, Lori Luff, Jennifer Fenner ’03, Bob Farris ’79 and Deb Tripp ’92 volunteered at Cooks Children’s Hospital in Fort Worth, Texas.
5. Members of the Kansas City Chapter’s Arrowhead Committee include (continued on p. 21)
KANSAS CITY

The Kansas City Alumni Chapter hosted a Chiefs watch party in September and raised a significant amount of money for its scholarship fund, thanks in large part to a donation by Joe Bonino, owner of The Quaff and long-time Bearcat supporter. The “First Friday” happy hours and the Fall Classic at Arrowhead festivities were successful, and special thanks go to the Nebraska/Western Iowa Chapter for its help at Arrowhead. Chapter members attended several watch parties for the semi-final and national championship football games and participated in North Kansas City’s Snake Saturday parade.

ST. JOSEPH

The St. Joseph Alumni and Friends Chapter teamed up with Northwest’s Office of Admissions and staffed a booth at “Rock Off!”, an event featuring several live local and regional bands and exhibitors geared toward high school students. The chapter also welcomed Matt Baker, Northwest’s director of residential life, to its January social. Baker discussed the University’s current housing demands and plans.

ARIZONA

Nearly 40 members of the Arizona Alumni Chapter attended the Arizona Cardinals vs. Kansas City Chiefs football game, and about 25 people attended the pregame party at Fox and the Hound Smokehouse and Sports Bar. In March, alumni and friends attended a Kansas City Royals spring training game. For more information about the Arizona Chapter, contact Allyn Calhoun ’82 at adcalhoun@cox.net or (602) 938-2302.

SOUTHERN IOWA

The Southern Iowa Alumni and Friends Chapter participated in the Northwest Homecoming Parade. In April, the chapter celebrated its first anniversary with a social and by volunteering for the Special Olympics. Bev Schenkel, dean of enrollment management, discussed student enrollment at the social. The chapter has a good start on its scholarship fund and welcomes fellow Bearcats to join in the fun with other Northwest alumni and friends in southern Iowa.

MARYVILLE

The Maryville Alumni and Friends Chapter sponsor a 5 p.m. monthly social the second Thursday of each month at Carson’s Sports Grille. The chapter organized its annual Super Bowl Party in February, and the money raised at the event benefits the chapter scholarship. In July, the chapter will host Summer Bash in Maryville. For more information about the Maryville Chapter, contact Roger Bundridge at roger@nwmcell.com or the Office of University Advancement at alumni@nwmissouri.edu or (660) 562-1248.

For many girls, aspirations of playing football—tackle football—typically end during their elementary school years. But for Nance Wernes ’83, Mindy White ’99, Anna Findley (attd. ’83–’86) and current Northwest student Tessa Stewart, that dream is still a reality.

Playing for the Kansas City Storm, a women’s tackle football team in the Independent Women’s Football League, the four women are making the most of their opportunities in football.

“It’s great to be a part of something that is bigger than you are,” said Findley, a credit and collections manager with the Kansas City Water Department and an offensive guard for the Storm.

For Wernes, a senior program manager for Sprint Nextel, there is an extra-special meaning to the team: Not only is she an offensive tackle and tight end, she also is the team’s owner. Having completed a rigorous application process in 2004, she was granted a license for the Kansas City Storm to join the league during the 2005 season.

“When we took the field for the first time and I saw everyone wearing the new Kansas City Storm uniforms, I was very proud,” Wernes said. “A lot of hard work went into making that moment a possibility.”

During the 2006 season, more than 300 fans attended each game at the Storm’s home stadium at Blue Springs High School. With an overall record of 3-5, the Storm finished the regular season in third place in the Midwest division, and are well-armed for the 2007 season, which runs May 5 through June 30.

The women who play for the Storm admit they love the sport, but because there is no monetary compensation involved, they “haven’t quit their day jobs.”

White, an attorney with Shook, Hardy and Bacon by day and linebacker by night, said it isn’t about the money.

“I love being able to take out life’s frustrations in a positive and legal, yet violent, manner,” White said. “There’s nothing like running as fast as you can and tackling someone after a long day at the office.”

Stewart, an interactive digital media major who plays wide receiver and defensive back, echoes those sentiments. Growing up, she was involved in many activities, including Pop Warner football.

“I love being a part of a competitive team, and I am really excited that women have the opportunity to play the sport that I love,” Stewart said.

The IWFL, a non-profit organization, was founded in 2000 solely for the purpose of women’s tackle football. Today, the league boasts 31 teams in the United States and Canada.

While all four Bearcats have personal reasons for playing, they all agree that following their dreams is the overriding factor.

“Anything is possible,” Findley said. “Sometimes you may have to wait a few years, even decades, but never give up on your dreams.”

SPORTS PLAYED AT NORTHWEST: Volleyball
GRADUATED: 1994
MAJOR: Accounting
SPORTS MEMORIES: The intensity and level of play I experienced at Northwest is something I will never forget, but my best memories are the times I spent with my teammates. We spent a great deal of time together on the road, in the gym and in the training room. My teammates became, in so many ways, my family during those years.

SINCE GRADUATION: After graduation, I was an accountant in St. Louis and then moved to Huntington Beach, Calif., where I was project manager for a payroll service company. I married David Pessin in 1997 and moved back to St. Louis the following year. David and I have two children, Andrew, 4, and Emily, 1, who are very active and keep us extremely busy. I am currently the vice president of finance at TRG Group in St. Louis.

CURRENT INVOLVEMENT IN ATHLETICS: I continue to play volleyball in a local women's league each week, but I no longer play in tournaments. David and I now spend our weekends watching our son play soccer during the winter and baseball during the summer. Last summer I completed three triathlons and anticipate many more in the years to come.

Inductees into the 2006 M-Club Athletics Hall of Fame

Four individuals were inducted into Northwest’s 2006 M-Club Athletics Hall of Fame and include three-time NCAA tennis qualifier Julie Callahan Collins ‘93, ’99; first team All-MIAA basketball player Joe Hurst ’87; All-MIAA punter, defensive back and shortstop Marty Albertson ’78, ’92; and All-American tennis player Yasmine Osborn ’99.

Assistant Coach George Adeyami ’85, ’89 (left) and Head Coach Mark Rosewall guided the 1987 men’s tennis team to become the first MIAA school to sweep the men’s conference title. Members of the team included Robert Veasey ’89, ’93 and Jorge Castilla ’90.

Kelly Leintz Franzen ’88 represented the 1987 women’s tennis team that was inducted into the M-Club Hall of Fame. She is joined by Assistant Coach George Adeyami (left) and Head Coach Mark Rosewell.

Northwest leads Division II in football, men’s basketball playoff appearances in past 10 seasons
Tennis teams advance to NCAA postseason
Softball earns biggest shutout since 1994
Top-ranked Grand Valley State won its fourth national title in the last five years after escaping with a 17-14 victory over No. 2 Northwest.

“This was a great college football game,” said head football coach Mel Tjeerdsma. “Unfortunately for us, we made some mistakes. I am proud of our effort. The guys did everything that I asked them to do. Grand Valley did a great job defensively and forced some of our turnovers.”

Northwest ended its season at 14-1, wrapping up its second-ever 14-win season.

Northwest men make it to round of 32 in NCAA postseason play

The Northwest men’s basketball team logged a 24-7 overall record and won a share of the Mid-America Intercollegiate Athletics Association regular season crown. The 20+ wins was the seventh time in the last eight seasons for the occurrence, and the Bearcats played in the postseason NCAA South Central Region Tournament for the seventh time since 2000.

At the MIAA Tournament, No. 1 seed Northwest set a tournament record with 36 free throws in taking down No. 8 seed Missouri Southern in first-round action before falling in the semifinals to Pittsburg State, 76-70.

Fortunately, the Bearcats had another shot at the Gorillas and won their sixth straight opening-round regional playoff game by defeating Pittsburg State, 74-53. However, the season ended after a 72-61 setback at the hands of Final Four participant No. 6 Central Missouri.

Head Coach Steve Tappmeyer, who stands with the fourth-most wins (372) of any league coach, garnered MIAA Coach of the Year accolades, his fourth overall.

The Northwest women’s basketball team ended its season in the NCAA Division II Tournament with an 87-72 loss to No. 2 seed West Texas A&M. This was just the fourth time in school history the women have advanced to the NCAA postseason tournament. The Bearcats finished with an 18-12 record.

Munsey honored at Horace Mann reunion
Glen Munsey ‘31 of Liberty was honored at the College High/Horace Mann annual reunion with a tribute to his 75th anniversary of graduation from College High School.

Munsey and his wife, Lois, were married 65 years before she died in 1999. They have four children, all of whom attended Horace Mann:
Louise and Jean, both of Liberty, Roy of Rock Port and Ann, who is deceased.

Munsey said he has fond memories of his schooldays and is amazed at the dramatic changes on campus since he was a student.

“It was quite a school,” he said. “It was located in the college (Administration) building. The campus was very sparse, with the gymnasium, power house, dormitory and dairy.”

More than 170 people, 111 of whom are graduates, attended the dinner during Northwest’s Homecoming weekend.

While many people recall what they were doing on historic days such as when man first walked on the moon or when terrorists attacked our country, Ronn King ’62 knows exactly what happened nearly every day of his life.

King, who lives in Sioux Falls, S.D., began keeping a daily journal when he was a young boy.

His new hobby, now that he’s retired from the radio industry, is taking his daily journals and creating a bound book for each of his sons.

“I hope to leave a lasting legacy to my children – one that they can someday hand down to their children,” King said.

Even King’s busy college years at Northwest didn’t prevent his journaling.

“Some of my entries from my time at Northwest include freshman registration day, memories of wearing green beanies, working on the Alpha Phi Omega float for Homecoming and my involvement in getting KDLX established at Northwest,” he said.

King said his journal entries from the 1970s contained the most interesting stories and best remembrances because that was the decade his children were born.

Once he completes the book for his sons, King is considering publishing a novel based on his journal entries.

“I wouldn’t use all of my entries,” he said. “And I’d have to embellish on the ones I use.”

In the meantime, King will continue to work on his book and journal from time-to-time. But he will always be able to recall any day from the last 50 years – including Sept. 6, 1957, the day at Northwest he and “all the freshman were issued green beanies to wear henceforth for initiation.”

KATHY HATFIELD was inducted into the Pirates Hall of Fame at Platte County High School on Oct. 21. She retired from the district in 2002 as a teacher and coach.

1981 PHIL WRIGHT (SPECIALIST ’93) ◆ will assume the duties as superintendent of schools in the Liberty School District on July 1. He is currently the district’s assistant superintendent for business operations. His wife, Ellen, is an educator and serves as the director of elementary gifted education in the Fort Osage School District. They live in Liberty with their two children, Emma, 15, and Anna, 14.

1983 MEL GOIN (MASTER’S) is chief financial officer at Mercy Medical Center in Sioux City, IA. He served in a similar position at Mount Carmel Regional Medical Center in Pittsburg, KS, for 16 years.

1984 HUMPHREY MINX is the aeromedical safety officer for the Commander, U.S. Marine Forces Command. He previously served three years in Jacksonville, FL, where he was director of the Aviation Survival Training Center. He is stationed in Norfolk, VA.

1985 BRADY ABEL is an ordained minister at the Immanuel United Church of Christ in Sedalia. He graduated from Eden Theological Seminary in St. Louis with a master of divinity degree.

1986 DANA KEMPKER ◆ and Jack Poepsel were married July 29. Dana is the national sales manager at Apogee Art Services, and Jack is an electrical engineer at Liquid Container. They live in Racine, WI.

Passion for theatre leads Genochio to KC Rep

Whether the Kansas City Repertory Theatre is performing a classical or contemporary production, Jerry Genochio ’91 is involved in nearly every aspect – from budget planning to the final curtain call.

“The greatest reward of my position is getting to opening night and seeing everything completed and feeling a great sense of pride in the production staff that I am so fortunate to supervise,” said Genochio, associate director for production. “I never grow tired of seeing the incredible things this staff can bring to life.”

KC Rep produces eight plays a year that are seen by more than 100,000 people each season, and Genochio oversees all budgets, planning and supervision of the production staff.

Genochio has worked at KC Rep since 2005. Previously, he was production manager at the Alabama Shakespeare Festival and then relocated to the Midwest.

“In my brief history at the Rep, my favorite play has been August Wilson’s ‘Jitney.’ It’s a remarkable story about personal beginnings and endings,” Genochio said. “The acting was superb, and the play was so full of magic moments. It was truly a moving and personal experience for me.”

Genochio’s career is anything but typical. Sometimes he has a 9 to 5 day, while other times he’s at the theatre until late in the evening, and he often has to balance several projects simultaneously.

“The beauty of theatre is every play opens and closes, then it’s on to the next five projects that have been under way for weeks,” he said.

The theatre life is not something new to Genochio, who has been involved with the art since college.

“I was fortunate to be part of the house crew for the Rep’s touring productions that came to Northwest’s Performing Arts Center,” Genochio said. “Those experiences have stayed with me throughout my career.”

Genochio’s love for theatre has allowed him to work throughout the country, but he said he’s content where he is – at least for now.

“I’m always aware that the next great job is out there, but one thing theatre has taught me is that one life is all we get,” he said. “It’s time for me to stay put and explore my life a little.”

Allen finds himself in the driver’s seat

When the small Iowa town of Newton was dealt a devastating blow to its economy, Mayor Chaz Allen ’95 moved into high gear, and now the town is on the fast track to a successful revitalization.

During Allen’s first term as mayor, Newton, a town of 16,000 in central Iowa, experienced the loss of its largest employer, Maytag. The plant and headquarters had been in Newton since 1893, and its closing left hundreds of employees out of work.

“We were disappointed that Maytag left Newton. The negotiations and emotions surrounding the plant closure were definitely the toughest experiences I’ve had as mayor,” said Allen, also a government relations specialist for Iowa Telecom.

But Allen and other city leaders regrouped, refusing to allow the town to deteriorate. Today, the city’s economy is more diversified and includes industries such as manufacturing, education, entrepreneurship and entertainment.

Not only did Newton experience a much-needed economic boost, the opening of the Iowa Speedway in Newton was the icing on the cake. And when the speedway opened in September, Allen and the citizens of Newton were all smiles.

“The speedway has been phenomenal so far,” Allen said. “In the first two weekends, we had 65,000 people in attendance each weekend. That’s four times our population. The speedway and local sales tax will put $1.2 million back in Newton’s pockets.”

The Pfeiffer family of Green City was introduced as the Northwest Family of the Year during halftime ceremonies at the annual Family Day football game last fall.

The family was nominated by Northwest senior Kim Pfeiffer, who serves as a student ambassador. Two of Kim’s three siblings also attend Northwest: Kristin, a graduate student and athletic trainer; and Nick, a sophomore and member of the Bearcat baseball team.

Their father, David Pfeiffer ’81, pitched for the Bearcats from 1976 to 1979.

The Family of the Year program is sponsored by ARAMARK, the University’s food service and maintenance vendor, which awarded the family a $500 scholarship and other prizes.

Bearcat alumni production crew

A view from the Phi Sig house

Not only was the game nationally televised by the sports network, which provided the lights, but it was the first time a night game had been played at home since 1977. Members of Phi Sigma Kappa continued their tradition of “making noise” after each Bearcat score. With the win, the Bearcats advanced to the NCAA Division II national championship game.
Being named "No. 1" in a field is quite an accomplishment, and for Tom Norris ’75, it’s becoming a natural occurrence.

Norris’s company, Tom Norris Design Group, has been given the top spot among Phoenix architect and design companies in 2005 and 2006 as part of the “Ranking Arizona” list in Arizona Business magazine. Norris also has a house construction company, Tom Norris Custom Homes, which has been listed either second or third for the last eight years in the magazine’s ranking.

His design group produces designs that provide clients an expression and view of their home’s potential. Norris said the approach gives him the opportunity to experiment with different materials and to focus on diversity and style. In addition, his design team is committed to providing clients with design that minimizes the impact on the world by integrating “green” building techniques and materials seamlessly into the process.

His profession in architecture and design may seem unusual considering his educational background at Northwest as a philosophy and humanities major. Norris gives credit to his inspirational professor, Dr. Robert Nagle, who taught him to be creative and use his mind to overcome difficult decisions.

“I enjoyed the process of questioning or unconventional thinking and coming up with solutions to problems,” Norris said. “It wasn’t an analytical approach, but instead it was creative development of my own thoughts.”

A creative mind and refined problem solving skills certainly have given Norris an edge in his profession, especially when his projects may seem unconceivable due to unique Arizona terrain. However, he continues to design and build award-winning structures whether they’re on flat ground or hillsides, soft or hard soil.

Norris said he does most of his design work from 3 to 6 a.m. He then visits several job sites, and in the afternoon he typically meets with clients. Although he has long work hours, Norris enjoys spending time with his wife of 14 years and his 11-year-old son. He also is active in his large synagogue, where he is the vice president and soon-to-be president. In addition, Norris has his pilot’s license and a twin engine plane that he uses for business and pleasure.

For more information about Norris’s award-winning companies, visit www.tomnorrishomes.com and www.norrisdesigngroup.com.

Although the Abraham Lincoln statue has been a traditional landmark at Northwest for many years, a “new” tradition started when Brian Starkey ’97 wrote the anonymous Stroller column in The Northwest Missourian.

Former ‘Stroller’ writes one more column

I strolled through the Spanish Den on a Thursday afternoon in 1997, which at the time looked more like Max’s Diner on the early ’90s TV series “Saved by the Bell.” The Northwest Missourian was hot off the presses and gone in 20 minutes. Heads were buried in the back page to see who the Stroller was going to attack this week. Nothing was off limits, not even the kids at Horace Mann. This was blogging before blogging was blogging.

There were many times at five minutes after midnight on Sunday night that Jamie Hatz Robinet, the editor of the Missourian, would call and tell me that she couldn’t print what I had given her. I guess the First Amendment just wasn’t strong enough.

I was adamant about not calling myself “Your man,” but sure enough, Jamie always pushed her imperial powers and sprinkled it in.

I was a non-traditional choice for the Stroller and just regurgitated four years of thoughts on paper. For the first few weeks I targeted sorority rush, fraternities, independents and even the city of Maryville.

After my second month on the job, the tagline “The Stroller has been a tradition since 1918” was appended with “and does not reflect the views of The Northwest Missourian.” I guess that took all liability off the paper in case I crossed the libel line. That was the mark I left on the University, and I am slightly proud when I go back to read the Stroller that the disclaimer is still there.

For a couple of years, I made it a habit to read The Northwest Missourian online. I, on more than one occasion, could tell that someone reached back into the Stroller archives and pulled some ideas. I was flattered of course, but more upset that I never thought about doing it myself.

I am proud of Northwest. I do realize that I was just on the cusp of the University’s tipping point. Football has turned around, steam pipes are no longer an issue, post World War II housing has been renovated and, most importantly, students today have the ability to use their Aladine cards at Pizza Hut and Domino’s.

I am extremely proud to be a Northwest alumnus. We have Bearcats fighting wars, saving lives, playing professional sports and changing the world in their own subtle ways. I am content that the one mark I left at Northwest is a legal disclaimer that will forever be a tradition … since 1997.

Brian Starkey ’97 is employed at Service Management Group, a marketing research firm. He and his wife, Mollie Boehner Starkey ’01, a third-grade teacher, live in Liberty.
Consider adopting a Bearcat

Since its inception in 2004, the Adopt-a-Bearcat Scholarship Program has raised enough money to provide financial assistance to more than 550 Northwest students. This has been made possible by hundreds of generous supporters directing their gifts to Northwest through this program.

The support of these individual donors is doubled by the matching aspect of the Adopt-a-Bearcat Scholarship Program, all of which equates to more than $250,000 in scholarship support. It's simple: a minimum $250 gift provides $500 in scholarship support to a deserving Northwest student.

Moreover, this program is helping students succeed at Northwest and opening their eyes to the support offered by so many Northwest alumni and friends. Not only will the recipients graduate from Northwest with reduced financial burdens, but someday they may choose to pay their gifts forward through their own financial gift to the University.

To learn more about this unique scholarship opportunity, contact the Office of University Advancement at advance@nwmissouri.edu or (660) 562-1248.

The perfect date
... according to 10 Northwest Students

1. A great date is going to Carson’s Sports Bar and Grille in Maryville and watching the game on the many televisions because boys like sports, and I like the food.
   Tara Brooks, sophomore

2. I like to make dinner for the little lady.
   Alex Drury, junior

3. A good date is going to a concert put on by the Student Activities Council.
   Ali Clausen, sophomore

4. It depends on the time of year, but if it’s winter and there’s snow on the ground, sledding at night under the light of a full moon is always a good date idea.
   Matt Weeder, senior

5. Dinner and a movie at the Hangar is a perfect date. It’s like two dates in one.
   Kara Siefker, freshman

6. Cosmic bowling at Bearcat Lanes is always fun, but then again, I don’t have a girlfriend so I wouldn’t really know.
   Brian Schmitt, senior

7. Going to the Northwest Student Rec Center to play a sport one-on-one makes for a good date.
   Kayla Scott, junior

8. A great date is Tuesday’s Chinese buffet at The Mandarin. It’s become a tradition for my girlfriend and me, and she’s also teaching me how to cook.
   Robert Hawes, junior

9. I like to take a date to Mozingo Lake just east of Maryville. You can put the tailgate on a truck down and lie down and watch the stars.
   Jonathan Maloney, sophomore

10. I think it’s a good idea to opt for a charitable date. You can walk the dogs at the Humane Society together because you’ll get good exercise and great conversation or help Habitat for Humanity build a house.
    Jessica Hartley, senior
WILLIAM HOOD and Vanessa Albers were married June 24 in Smithville. William is a talent manager at ProStaff, and Vanessa is a dental assistant in Kearney. They live in Smithville.
