

I believe the content received at the Symposium is very high quality, and it's relevant, and you also get new information. I am always able to leave the symposium with a couple new tidbits of information that I can take back and utilize in my classroom and when I'm actually able to go out into the field as well and do some of my own interventions. It's always a great time just to be able to network with fellow recreation therapists because typically, I'm just kind of in my little bubble at the university, but it's always great to get out and to learn more and hear more about what is going on in the field.
